

Abstract

A dispensing apparatus has a motor drive that moves an output member along an axis in a first chamber. A shuttle valve controls flow between a first chamber and either a reservoir of material or an output port. Extending the output member discharges precise volumes of material through an output port. Retracting the output member fills the first chamber.